TERESA, a socially intelligent telepresence system

In conjunction with the French social event « Faites-vous plaisir seniors », the European team of the TERESA project is organising on Wednesday, October 19th 2016, 9am-5pm, a demonstration of its semi-autonomous telepresence robot.

TERESA is a FP7-ICT-2013-10 project funded by the European Commission. The project is coordinated by the University of Amsterdam (Netherlands) and includes the University of Twente (Netherlands), the Universidad Pablo de Olavide (Spain), Imperial College of London (United Kingdom), the University of Oxford (United Kingdom), and the expert center MADoPA (France).

The TERESA (TElepresence REinforcement-learning Social Agent) project aims to develop a telepresence robot of unprecedented social intelligence, thereby helping to pave the way for the deployment of robots in settings such as homes, schools, and hospitals that require substantial human interaction. In telepresence systems, a human controller remotely interacts with people by guiding a remotely located robot, allowing the controller to be more physically present than with standard teleconferencing.

TERESA is built upon the Giraff telepresence device, which consists of a video screen attached to a base with wheels. The device can be controlled via a computer by a user in a remote location, whose face appears on the device's video screen. It has a camera, microphone and a speaker to enable video conferencing
